Dear Director Mulvaney:

Congratulations on your confirmation to serve as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. We look forward to working with you in your new role, and as we approach budget season, we would like to take this opportunity to remind you of the importance of crop insurance to rural economies.

The 2014 Farm Bill made a multitude of cuts to the farm safety net. In addition to these cuts, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) is now projecting that crop insurance will come in more than $20 billion under budget as compared to the costs projected at the time of passage of the 2014 Farm Bill. However, an overreliance on savings from the agriculture community in the future will greatly undermine rural economies that have faced an almost 50% decline in net farm income from over the past three years. In these challenging economic times, it is federal crop insurance that offers lenders the assurances they need to continue to provide capital to America’s hard-working farmers and ranchers.

The 2014 Farm Bill placed greater emphasis on risk management than previous farm bills and in doing so protects the interests of the American taxpayer. Farmers spend approximately $3.5 to $4 billion per year of their own money to purchase insurance from the private sector. On average, farmers also must incur losses of almost 30 percent before their insurance coverage pays an indemnity.

Crop insurance allows producers to customize their policies to their individual farm and financial needs. Federal crop insurance is based on fundamental market principles, which means high risk areas and high value crops pay higher premiums for insurance. This emphasis on crop insurance and risk management has replaced the constant demand for ad hoc disaster assistance, which is subject to the whim of Washington, is paid for entirely by the taxpayer, and is not delivered in a timely manner.

Farmers and lawmakers agree that crop insurance is a linchpin of the farm safety net and is crucial to the economic security of rural America. We urge you to break with a tradition set by the previous Administration and to avoid cuts to crop insurance during budget discussions.

Sincerely,
